United States Congressman Ed Case seeks re-election to a third term representing Hawaii's Second District (all of Hawaii except urban Honolulu) in the U.S. House of Representatives.

"I humbly ask the 600,000-plus citizens I proudly represent to send me back to D.C. for another term because I believe I've done a good job of serving all of Hawaii's people in Congress, and I'm just winding up!"

Case was first elected to the 107th Congress in 2002 to finish the term of the late Patsy Mink. He was re-elected to the current 108th Congress in 2003. "I received valuable seniority for my service in the 107th, so going into the upcoming 109th I will be a third-termers and that seniority will really start paying off."

Case, 51, was born and raised on the Big Island, the fourth generation of his family in Hawaii. He graduated from Hawaii Preparatory Academy (Kamuela,) Williams College (Massachusetts,) and UCal/Hastings Law School. He served in Congress as Legislative Assistant to U.S. Senator Spark Matsunaga. He practiced law in Hawaii for twenty years with Carlsmith Ball, and served for eight years in the Hawaii State Legislature. He and his wife, Audrey (Nakamura), have four children and live in Kaneohe.

Case's priorities are finishing our difficult missions overseas and bringing our troops home, balancing our deteriorating federal budget, targeting federal assistance at Hawaii's challenges, and continuing to bring the office of Congressman to the front doors of his communities.
